

91

Auburn, Sept. 14, 1864.

My Dear One:

Fanny having kept you posted as to our movements since we were in Syracuse, I need not go into particulars.

Today is the eventful day, and this evening the time for the consummation of the marriages. Ellie has been quite ill ever since our arrival, and under medical treatment. This morning she is some better; but it will be as much as she can do to go through the ceremony. The invited guests have been apprised that they must not come; still, there will be a large company present of relatives, &c. Dear Lucretia Matt arrived yesterday afternoon in the same train with Wendell from

Albany, though he never saw her all the way. She came up to Albany in the same steamer, but he did not know she was aboard. She is looking and feeling very well.

Samuel J. May will come
this afternoon.

In consequence of Ellie's publication, by the unanimous advice of us all, she and William, instead of going to Lenox and Philadelphia, will go immediately to Boston and Dorchester. So, be prepared for the bridegroom and bride.

We shall all leave to-morrow morning, and I shall be with you to tea on Friday evening, and probably William and Ellie also.

The mail closes directly.
All kind love and kindest sympathies.

Y. 6 #91

